The earliest known language spoken in the British Isles, which is what the question actually asks for, was Common Brittonic. It was a Celtic language, the ancestor of Welsh, Cumbric, Cornish, Breton, and maybe Pictish (though some argue that Pictish might not have even been Indo-European).

What is known is that in the course of the first millennium BC the Celts began to arrive in Britain and Ireland. Their language was adopted by the population already in these islands. In Ireland this Celtic language developed into Irish, the earliest stage of which is Old Irish (600-900), preceded by Ogam,...

There is also an official body, the Cornish Language Board / Kesva an Taves Kernewek, and a more general cultural organisation called Gorseth Kernow, roughly 'The bard meeting of Cornwall', which supports the Cornish language.
